* Variety currently not accepted by the ARBA

¹ Black based reds, oranges, golds, creams, and whites often have black skin that may be a DQ, a chocolate base is preferred

² Lilac based REO is often very dark; a beige base is preferred for the correct shade of Red-Eyed Orange

³ Broken with white, not caused by the white spotting (S) gene, but rather by the silver (cr) gene, when combined with the white spotting gene, it will cause even more white

⁴ Though technically a Dark Eyed White, this has dark paws, ears, and eye rims, would likely be DQ'd and is often known as a "Silent Silver"

⁵ Modifiers will determine if an animal is tortoiseshell or brindle – or in between

⁶ Selves with lower level C alleles may appear to be faded or have a faded undercolor
